The G20 Summit brought global leaders to Gauteng, generating over R1 billion in local revenue. MandateMeter opened a special G20 page to capture citizen sentiment on how this money should be used.

While only three votes were cast, those three voices represents the beginning of a journey. It shows that even one citizen standing up matters — and it sets the stage for thousands more to follow.

MandateMeter is about accountability, participation, and legacy. The G20 page is now closed, but the spirit of engagement continues. Every poll, every page, every click builds momentum toward a stronger civic platform.

The G20 page may have closed, but its results mark the symbolic launch of MandateMeter's mission: to ensure that every South African voice counts. Three votes may seem small, yet they carry the weight of a beginning — proof that citizens are ready to stand up and be heard. MandateMeter is rising from the dust, built by resilience and driven by legacy. As more citizens register, buy polls, and engage with pages, this platform will grow into a force that not only measures accountability but creates opportunity. This is just the first step. The next will be thousands of voices, jobs created, and a civic platform that belongs to the people. MandateMeter — Your Voice. Your Legacy. Our Future.
